APPLICATION FOR LICENSE TO REPRODUCE ASEBA® FORMS

ASEBA® forms are available for purchase in three formats:

- preprinted packages of paper forms available in Standard US English (and in Latino Spanish, limited to the CBCL/1½-5, CBCL/6-18, YSR/11-18), available through our online store;
- ASEBA-Web™ subscription, for online completion by informant or as a printable form; and
- pursuant to a Site License to reproduce ASEBA® forms, which is the License requested through this application.

Is a Site License right for you?

A common request from researchers, students, and clinicians is to administer ASEBA forms electronically. ASEBA-Web™ provides functionality for serving standard US English forms electronically. Further, many non-English language translations of forms have been integrated for electronic administration or printing through ASEBA-Web. You may review which translations are available on ASEBA-Web here.

A Site License is the right option when you intend to:

- administer ASEBA forms electronically outside of ASEBA-Web, such as through REDCap, Qualtrics, another survey platform, or your own proprietary software or electronic health record (EHR);
- print the forms yourself;
- administer forms by telephone or in person as an interview; or
- reproduce the forms in a booklet alongside other assessments.

If you need a translated form that is not offered through ASEBA-Web, additional translations are available pursuant to a Site License. You may review those translations here. If the form you need has not yet been translated into your target language, we will let you know.

Completing the application

Please complete the entire application on the following page. Please provide as much detail as possible as it will help in our review and quote development.

Please enter the number of administrations (or copies) as a single number, not a range. This number influences the price of your quote, so report the maximum number you expect to use as accurately as you can.

Please do not underestimate the number of administrations. If you need more administrations than your agreement permits, it will be your responsibility to contact us to amend the agreement, which will incur additional administrative costs. Please also do not overestimate the number, as Site Licenses are non-refundable, and the cost will not be adjusted if you use fewer administrations than the number stated in your agreement.

Copyright and alteration of ASEBA forms

All ASEBA materials are copyrighted and must not be reproduced, distributed, or altered without written permission from the copyright owner.

A Site License permits reproduction only pursuant to the terms stated in a fully executed License Agreement. Once a License expires, any administering, printing, or distributing of ASEBA® forms would be unlicensed reproduction. That includes forms left active in REDCap, Qualtrics, an EHR, or any other electronic system. To keep using the forms, a Licensee must request an extension before its License expires.

Copyrights provide legal protection against unauthorized reproduction, distribution, and alteration of the copyrighted materials. Copyright infringement can result in court-awarded damages of up to $150,000 per form, as well as criminal fines and penalties.

Besides violating international copyright law, altered versions of ASEBA forms are apt to produce invalid data, because they would differ from the forms with which the normative, validity, and reliability data were obtained. Data obtained with altered forms would also lack comparability with the thousands of studies that have used the standard forms.

Even small alterations can have unfortunate effects. As an example, in the Ontario Child Health Study of several thousand children, the definition of the 0 rating for CBCL problem items was changed from Not true to Never or not true. This slight change was not noticed by the researchers until after the data had been collected and analyzed, yielding considerably higher problem scores for children in Ontario than in the U.S. When the change in wording was noticed, an experimental comparison was made between responses by Ontario parents receiving the original CBCL wording and parents receiving the altered wording that included the word never. This comparison showed that inclusion of the word never produced significantly fewer 0 ratings and significantly higher scores overall (Woodward et al., 1989, J. Child Psychology & Psychiatry, 30, 919-924).

Another problem with copied or altered forms is that others may use or copy them without realizing that they are not the standard forms and that they are violating international copyright law, as well as obtaining invalid data.

Because the strengths of standardized procedures are lost when they are destandardized, we do not generally grant permission to alter ASEBA forms. Please be sure to describe any alterations you wish to make to the forms in detail on your application.
